Communicating to the public everything that is involved in the art and science of conservation has always been a skill in itself. We believe that promoting public understanding, storytelling and appreciation of conservation are becoming increasingly important ways to recognise, inspire, and contextualise the work of our profession.

We were delighted to receive such varied and strong entries this year, so we are again asking the conservation community and the wider public to cast their votes. As we continue our journey through a vastly changed world, which of these projects speaks to you?

The winner of our £2,500 prize will be chosen 50% by public vote and 50% by our judging team. Two honourable mentions will also be selected by our judges. Our Keck shortlist speakers will be giving talks throughout the IIC Lima Congress 2024, and the winner will be announced on its final day, Friday 27 September.
